

Your legacy of giving starts today

Roth IRA Conversion

If you're converting a traditional Individual Retirement Account to a Roth IRA, there's never been a better time to make a meaningful gift to community.

How it works

- Talk with your tax advisor to determine the benefits and tax consequences of converting all or a portion of your traditional IRA to a Roth IRA. Starting in 2010, your taxable income is not a factor in Roth IRA conversions. You decide if this is right for you; a Roth IRA conversion is a tax-reportable transaction.
- You make a gift to the Community Foundation from your non-IRA personal assets—you can give cash, appreciated stock, real estate, or other assets. You may want to consider a charitable gift equal to the taxable value of Roth IRA conversion assets.
- You receive maximum charitable deduction for your community foundation gift which may offset taxable income from your Roth IRA conversion.
- Depending on a person's means and wishes, you direct gifts into one of two types of funds: personal endowments or community endowments. Personal endowments require a minimum gift of $50,000 and a consultation to determine the name and purpose of the fund. Gifts of any size can be made to a community endowment. These gifts are combined with others, creating a greater pool for larger, more impactful grantmaking. We handle all the administrative details
- Your gift becomes part of an endowment that is invested to grow over time. Earnings are used to make grants to the community. Your gift—and all future earnings from it—is a permanent source of community capital.

Tax wise and community minded

Roth IRAs are an attractive option for people who'd like to create tax-free income for retirement. Unlike traditional IRAs, Roth IRAs invest after-tax dollars—accumulation and withdrawals are tax-free. This strategy makes sense for people concerned about the potential effects of rising taxes on retirement income or high taxes when retirement assets pass to heirs in an estate.

When IRA holders transfer these assets to a Roth IRA, the amount of funds transferred is considered taxable income. If younger than 59½, tax professionals generally recommend using non-IRA assets to pay these taxes due... or seek additional tax deductions.

Community-minded individuals can lessen these tax consequences and advance community causes by increasing charitable contributions in the same year of the Roth IRA conversion. Ask your tax advisor if this approach is right for you.

Choose a Fund

When you make a gift to Grand Rapids Community Foundation, you can start a special fund (see front) with the name of your choice. The way you direct that fund—and your level of involvement in the grants made from that fund—is up to you. Choose from:

- Fund for Community Good—Address a broad range of current and future needs. The community foundation awards strategic grants to select projects and programs.
- Field of Interest Fund—Target your gifts to causes important to you. The community foundation awards grants to programs addressing a specific interest area. Grand Rapids Community Foundation has funds for the arts, education, the environment, health, neighborhoods and economic prosperity.
- Donor Advised Fund—Choose ongoing involvement for yourself or your family in awarding grants from the fund you create. Establish or add to this fund in high income years and balance your grant recommendations for years to come.
- Designated Fund—Support the good work of a specific nonprofit organization with a source of income, plus planned giving and investment management.
- Scholarship—Invest in our community's future by supporting students seeking higher education. You may select the criteria for scholarship recipients and Grand Rapids Community Foundation takes care of the details.

Review other retirement assets

If a Roth IRA conversion is not right for your personal or financial circumstances and if you are concerned with potentially high estate taxes, the charitable beneficiary designation is a good choice for your retirement assets and life insurance policies.

Grand Rapids Community Foundation provides a simple, powerful, and highly personal approach to giving. We offer a variety of giving tools to help you achieve your charitable goals.

You can make a gift of cash, stocks, bonds, real estate, or other assets to your community foundation. Most charitable gifts qualify for maximum tax advantage under federal law. For more information and ideas on ways to integrate your financial planning with charitable giving, ask your financial advisor or contact a member of the Community Foundation's development team at 616.454.1751.
